MONTFIRE.

To-day Sir Moses Montefiore attains the remarkable age of 100 years. Among the Hebrews he is probably the most prominent living figure. As a philanthropist he occupies a place in the front rank among the mildest men of the age. It is testimony to his large-heartedness, to the usefulness of his well-spent life, and to the great good he has accomplished among his fellow-men, that the world does him honor irrespective of creeds. His record commends alike the admiration of Jew and Gentile, of Christian and unbeliever. His business career has been no less conspicuous, and, paternally, than his life-long devotion to the best interests of the human race. As early as 1837, when returning from his devoted labors in the plague-stricken regions of Syria, the sovereign of England honored him with Knighthood. Three years later he again gave evidence of his courageous philanthropy by his journey to Damascus and the release of the imprisoned Jews. It is believed that no other man could have accomplished what he did by an appeal to the humane side of the character of Mohammed Ali, nor with the Sultan, from whom he won the grant of equal rights and protection for the Jews in Turkey. Scarcely had he returned from these charitable missions, when the epidemic of the Holy Land demanded the exertions of his great heart and open purse. This notable charity was followed by his journey to Russia, by which he secured from a tyrannical Czar the repeal of the laws and edicts under which the Jews were persecuted. In 1854 he again went to Palestine to succor the afflicted and aid the needy remaining there in fields of industry. He has not confined his labors to the people of his own race; notably in 1863 he intervened in behalf of the Christians of Syria, with the same success that has marked every effort he has made in behalf of suffering mankind. There is no land of the Old World where he has not planted enduring monuments in the hearts of the people, of his goodness and breadth of soul. While America, happily, has not felt the need of his great influence, he is honored among our own people as he is elsewhere, as the high priest of philanthropy—one of the noblest examples among lovers of men, and as one of the loftiest types of humanity, doing the charity that is "a virtue of the heart, and not of the hands."

ARE WE SHIFTLESS?

The Grass Valley Tidings thinks that our climate for some purposes is altogether too good. "Its goodness induces shiftless practices. The early rains of the fall never failed to catch lots of wheat and other grain, and they not under shelter. The early snows fall in the mountains never yet missed finding herds of horned cattle and sheep up in the valleys of the high mountains. When the snow catches the cattle the poor brutes have to waste the substance they have acquired in the mountain pastures in fighting their way through the snow, and then those cattle come out of the mountains exhausted and poor." There is more in this than the Tidings refers to. It is true that an especially equable climate induces laxity of habit. Rigorous climates command vigor and enforce an active life. But the climate of northern California is not of necessity enervating. Nature, it is true, does so much for us that we are inclined to trust too much to her willing gentleness. But as the country sets us this must change. Competition and the struggle for existence will come from other sources than the rigors of climate. California invites and will have people among whom no shiftless habits in agricultural or other life will be tolerated.

The promise of the land will prove, when the State is properly settled, a stimulus more potent than the necessity of fighting nature to wring from her unwilling hand a bare subsistence. The Scot, in whose hands the roar of the ocean never ceases, is forced to battle with nature or die, and the result is a conquest that develops a hardy and vigorous race. Here the forces will be different, but scarcely less potent. Exertion will be enforced by appeal to acquisitiveness, as well as by the necessity of competing with a vast population far to the east.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 23d.—A man known as Henry Bodwell, 35 years of age, unmarried, and employed in the Union Box Factory on Spear street, was found dead in his room at the Hotel California, between Market and Davis streets, this morning, and the body was lying on a bed fully dressed and bloodied, having from a bullet wound in the right temple. Mr. T. J. Moore, forty-eight, blacksmith, was a letter carrier for the Post Office, Elmwood, 12th and 12th, addressed William Wallace, 11th and 12th, and Mrs. Wallace, 12th and 12th, Birdie, which it is presumed, was written by a sister of the deceased. A Railroad Company with a Solidified Vertebra.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 23d.—It is stated that Indians have been holding a council in the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, in the case of State Board of Railroad Commissioners, and the company interferes with the management of the road. It is said the Atlantic and Pacific managers will simply pay no attention to the road commissioners, taking the ground that as a foreign corporation, they could not be compelled to obey the orders of the State Board of Railroad Commissioners.
